The Ex-President and his Friend Benedic der, mar Georgelown, S

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 22 -- Ex President Cleveland left Princeton to-night for the South, where he will remain several days hunting with Col. E. C. Benedict, Rear Ad miral Evans, Gen. Anson G. Me Cook and Herman May. The party will go to Georgetown, S. C., and shortly after arriving there will g to the home of Col. Alexander, who lives on an island eighteen miles from that city.

Mr. Cleveland appears to have regained his normal health. He was accompained as far as Philadelphia by Mrs Cleveland.

The Wrong Number.

Salt Lake Herald.

The telephone girl and the bil clerk, to whom she had promised her heart and hand, were sitting in front of the fireplace talking about the happy days to come when they

From one little detail to another the talk finally drifted to the sub ject of building fires in the morning On this point the young man wa decided. He stated it as his em phatic opinion that it was the wife's place to get up and start the fires and let her poor, hard-working hus band rest

After this declaration there was silence for the space of about three quarters of a second. Then the tel ephone girl thrust out the finger en circled by her engagement ring and murmured weetly but firmly:

"Ring off, please. You got con nected with the wrong number."

Late Literary News

Sir Charles W. Dilke, contributes to The Cosmopolitan for February an article on "The Naval Strength of Nations," which gives not only a most interesting and comprehensive ac count of the natives of the great pow ers but also a clear insight into world politics. Few men possess such knowledge as the author's, gained from years of experience in a diplo matic and political career. The article is so broad in scope and straight forward in treatment that it will be read with interest not alone by states men but by every one whose thoughts travel beyond the immediate wants of a single day.

The Cosmopolitan is fortunate in its fiction for February. Stories of love, adventure and humor from the pens of famous authors make the "Midwinter Fiction Number" vitally interesting. "S. Cohn & Son" by Zangwill deals with the Anglicization of a Jew and the inevitable tragedy of his love for an English girl whose race prejudice triumphs over her nobler feelings. In "The Valley of the Dead". Thomas A. Janvier pictures the struggle of a dashing young engineer between love and duty. "Mr. MacGlowrie's Widow" is the title of a Western story in Bret Harte's happiest vein and "The Fish" is one of E. W. Kemble's best hum orous skits.

Mary Ellen's Solution to the Liquor Quertion.

Mrs. Lease, the former Kansas orator, now of New York, advanced the following original idea the other day, apropos of the liquor question now being agitated there: "I would make whiskey as free as water; 1 would let the man who wants it drink his fill. It would result beneficially in killing off a lot of saloon frequenters, who are only a burden to the world and to themselves, and eliminating their progeny, who furnish the recruits for the great army of crime and disease, and would bring into practical operation the law of the survival of the fittest."

SPIRITUAL AWAKESING AMONG THE YOUNG MEN OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

A Great Convention of the State's Finest Type of Young Manhood

The annual State convention of the Young Men's Christian Associa tions of South Carolina will convene this year in Columbia, Feb. S 11.

The gathering already bids fair to be one of considerable strength. It will differ in many respects from other conventions held. The opening session will be held on Saturday evening, and the closing session or Tuesday night. Sunday will be a red letter day in Columbia. Nearly all of the pulpits of the city will be occupied by prominent delegates and speakers

In the afternoon a mammoth meeting for men will be held in the Opera House. A chorus of male voices will lead the singing. Mr. L. A. Coulter, of Richmond, Va., a speaker of rare power and ability, will address the meeting. The Columbia Association confidently expects to see a thousand of the men of the city at the great gospel meeting.

On Sunday evening there will be tbree or four mass meetings in the principal churches, addressed by prominent Association men. Among whom are Messrs. C. L. Gates, of Atlanta, T. S. McPheeters, of St. Louis, and F S. Goodman, of New York City.

Monday and Tuesday will be de voted to the discussion of problems which affect men and boys. A well known Association worker is to open a discussion on work among the men and boys in factory districts and it is expected that this will be a topic of absorbing interest.

Altogether it will be a strong army of determined young Christian war riors that will take possession of the Capital early in February.

The State Executive Committee through the columns of this paper extends a special invitation to the Christian men of the State to attend this Convention. Any man who is interested in the welfare of the men and boys of South Carolina is invited. It will be necessary for him, how ever, to secure delegate's credentials. and this can be done by writing A. CONVERSE LOSES ITS HEAD.

The Resignation of President Wilson After Twelve Years' Service

Charlotte, N C., January 23 .-President Benjamin F. Wilson, of S. C., one of the largest female colleges in the South, has resigned, go to Europe to study.

The Origin of Mr. and Mrs.

In earlier times the ordinary man was simply William or John-that is to say, he had only a Christian name without any kind of "handle" before it or surname after it, says the Philadelphia Record.

Some means of distinguishing one John or William from another John or William became necessary. Nicknames derived from a man's trade or his dwelling place or from some personal peculiarity were tacked on to his Christian name, and plain John Lecame John Smith. As yet there were no "misters" in the land.

Some John Smith accumulated more wealth than the bulk of his fellows-became perhaps a landed proprietor or an employer of hired labor. Then he began to be called in the Norman French of the day the "maister" of this place or that, of these workmen, or of those.

In time the "maistre," or "maister," as it soon became, got tacked on before his name, and he became Mais ter Smith and his wife was Maistress Smith. Gradually the sense of possesion was lost sight of, and the title was conferred upon any kind-by mere possession of wealth or holding some position of more or less im

The Worrying Woman.

A young girl was one day crying bitterly on the side of the road, drawing the attention and exciting the sympathy of the passers by. Some one stopped and kindly asked what her trouble was. She then told them hat she was thinking that one day she might get married and have children, and, sobbing more bitterly than before, she burst: "Oh, what if it should be a girl?"

There are careful people who always take their precaution long in advance and are ever prepared for the worst, but the worrying woman invents annoyances at pleasure and revels in gloom. She ever frets and fidgets and surrounds everything with the most extricating imaginary difficulties.

When she begins packing trunk for a journey, she feels quite sure that she will never be able to put all her things in; when they are all in, she cannot lock the trunk; when that is done she is afraid the transfer man will come too late and she will miss her belongings when she arrives at her destination.

If her husband is five minutes late returning home, she begins to fear something has happened to him or she wonders where he may be; if he returns earlier than usual, she rushes up to him and hopes he has not been seized with illness that caused him to leave his business in a hurry.

When she gives a party, for days the house is in a perfect state of commotion. She is sure everything will go wrong, and she bothers the servants so much that if there is chance they will do their worst. If she gives a dinner, she wonders if the cook will not fall into the soup just at the moment when her guests arrive.

If it is a garden party, she is certain it will rain, which will spoil the whole thing. When the dinner party is going on, she is sitting on thorns, needles and pins. Her eyes are all over the place, and she has not ears for the two poor men sitting each side of her, who speak to her and try to entertain her with stories and anecdotes. She smiles at them in an absent sort of way. She is trembling every time a new course is brought round, she keeps her eyes on the candleshades, on each waiter. She is going through a perfect ordeal. By the time desert comes, she begins to wonder if the artists will be in time to entertain the guests she has invited to the reception that will follow the dinner, whether they will sing well and give pleasure. She is not even quite certain the piano is in business, for she would never sell stock without being sure it will afterwards rise in price, or buy may without feeling certain that now it will go down.

When her children are a little pale she is sure they are going to have diphtheria, scarlet or typhoid fever. It seldom enters her mind that their pallor may be due to a little surfeit of jam or pudding.

As a rule, she is a nice little wo Converse College, at Spartanburg, man, with a good, tender heart, full of devotion and unselfishness. If she would keep quite and not always after twelve years' service. He will, worry. But she cannot help it, and there is no cure for it. She is not to be bullied out of it, nor will kind words improve her, although they may comfort her. With a good, considerate husband, possessed of a cool head, and who only laughs at her little failings, she may get along and be happy.

She requires care, kind treatment. and constant application of soothing attentions .- Max O'Rell, in New York Journal.

Knowing a Little of Everything.

In books, lectures and addresses to young men no monition is today more strenuously urget upon their attention than the necessity of concontration. Every writer and speaker dwells upon the importance of browing some one thing thoroughly, instead of knowing a little of many things-in short, of being specialists -if we would succeed in life, and no doubt there is wisdom in the advice. It was wittily said of Edward Four nier by Jules Janin, "That man knows all; he knows only that, but he knows it well," yet Fournier, with all his erudition, remains an obscure man of letters. The measure of a ma 's learning today is the amount of his voluntary ignorance; the measure of his practical effectiveness, the number of things he is content leave unattempted. Broad culture and universality of knowledge, many sided. The Christian Endervor World. ness, are beautiful to look upon, and theoretically desirable; but it is the narrow edged men, the men of single work of the world and win its victories. All this is true, but is there not danger now of flying from one ex treme to another, of pushing specialism, the division and subdivision of labor, too far? Is it not well to remember that there is no profession in which a wide variety of knowledge may not be serviceable so far as it can be attained without a sacrifice of depth and accuracy in one's special subject of study?

In the legal profession for example is there any subject which may not fall within the inquiry of a court of law? Have not theology and medicine been invoked to enter the temple of Themis? Did we not see a few years ago the mystery of the Trinity brought into discussion in an English court and the question the right to a most valuable bequest determined by a critical examination of passages in the New Testament? Again during the argument for and against the validity of a marriage with a deceased wife's sister, was not the most copious learning brought to bear by British barristers upon the interpretation of a difficult verse in Leviticus? Wo once saw Rufus Choate buying in Little & Brown's book store a work on hydraulies,, a knowledge of which he required to argue one of his cases and another eminent Boston lawyer
